

Disseminating Knowledge in Developing Countries

Challenges and opportunities

Librarians and information professionals play a crucial role in developing and emerging countries – both in promoting access to information and in supporting their user communities. Sara Gwynn of International Network for the Availability of Scientific Publications (INASP) will shed some light on the realities and unique challenges to knowledge professionals in developing countries where electronic access is not always available. She will also discuss the many opportunities of working with this growing community.
