

Humberto López, Lead Economist and Sector Leader, Latin America and the Caribbean Region, World Bank

Mr. López has been Lead Economist and Sector Leader for Poverty Reduction and Economic Management for Central America at the World Bank since February 2008.

Previously, he was a senior economist in the Office of the Regional Chief Economist, where he co-authored reports on pro-poor growth and on remittances and development. He worked on operational aspects of the Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper and Heavily Indebted Poor Country initiatives at the Bank's Central America department and on pro-poor growth and poverty and social impact analysis in the Poverty department.

Mr. López has published on issues related to fiscal policy, optimal currency areas and real exchange rate misalignment, international business cycle synchronization, armed conflict and development, and pro-poor growth.

Before joining the Bank permanently, Mr. López was a Professor of Economics at the University of Salamanca (Spain) and a Visiting Professor at Louisiana State University, Baton Rouge (US).

Mr. López received a B.A. degree from University of the Basque Country, where he studied economics. He then studied at the University of Warwick (UK) where he got his M.Sc. (1991) before attending the European University Institute of Florence (Italy) for his Ph.D. in Economics (1995). Mr. Lopez is a national of Spain.

Pablo Fajnzylber, Senior Economist, Latin America and the Caribbean Region, World Bank

Mr. Fajnzylber is a Senior Economist in the Chief Economist's Office of the Latin America and Caribbean Region of the World Bank. Previously, he worked at the Bank's Finance and Private Sector Development Department and at its Development Economics Research Group.

Mr. Fajnzylber has published in various professional journals on a variety of development topics, including the economic impact of workers' remittances, the dynamics of micro-enterprises in developing countries, the impact of international trade on labor demand, and the economic causes of violent crime. He has also contributed to publications on informality and the determinants of economic growth in Latin America.

Before joining the World Bank as an economist, Mr. Fajnzylber was a Professor of Economics at the Federal University of Minas Gerais (Brazil). He also acted as a consultant for ECLAC and the World Bank. Mr. Fajnzylber, who is a Chilean National, received a Ph.D. degree in Economics from Michigan State University (US).